Developing individual excellence through rigor, innovation and personal attention

From the Superintendent's Desk:

Formula for Success

I am often asked what separates Madison School District from other institutions; what is the formula for success. This question is usually followed up with a comment regarding high district achievement levels despite the obstacles and difficult challenges many of our students face. Last year an independent analyst inquired about Madison's sustained level of extraordinary success. At that time I tried my best to capture how our faculty and staff at Madison empower students to reach such lofty standards and expectations.

First and foremost, literacy is a priority. Secondly, and although cliché, the district's Mission (purpose) statement drives what we strive to accomplish each and every day. Each member of the faculty and staff works with students to develop individual excellence through rigor, innovation, and personal attention. However, the students we serve often face challenges that affect their path to academic achievement. Therefore, we must – for each student's success – implement tiered intervention systems and processes with fidelity. This path to student success begins with assessments, a difficult and time consuming, but very important task. Assessments offer insight to the diverse student population we serve.

The student population at Madison includes a wide variety of academic, social/emotional, and behavioral needs. The continuous process to measure each student's progress occurs throughout the year at data meetings and student study team meetings, for example. Meetings such as this offer an opportunity to determine a course of action to best serve each student. Multiple data points are collected in order to prescribe specific interventions, supports, and opportunities so that each student is prepared to practice habits of success. These habits may be academic, social/emotional or behavioral in nature.

The process to assess each student requires a lot of training and professional development for faculty and staff. Processes learned by teachers allow them to leverage their time and effort with each student. Implementation of practices aligned with the 3rd grade reading legislation, for instance, required each teacher to participate in hours of training. As a result of these efforts, students are already seeing success as teachers, parents, and students work together. We recognize that each minute we spend with students is valuable, there is no time to waste. We must deliver research-based instructional best practices proven to yield a strong return on investment.

I am grateful to those who participate with training, coaching and mentoring. This is one of the many keys to success. Our dedicated faculty and staff continuously seeks to understand the interests and needs of each student with an adaptive and nimble approach to instruction and support. This approach coupled with our culture of togetherness and family contribute to our proven formula for success.

Madison Gleaner Arbor Establishes School Pantry

Madison School District, in cooperation with the Madison Gleaner Arbor, is establishing a school pantry to make sure no student goes hungry. Some of our students are food insecure, which means they do not consistently have access to enough food to be active and healthy. Children particularly lack access to meals at night or on the weekend, when their school-based support system goes away.

Counselors within the Madison School District will soon have access to a school pantry to assist students struggling with food insecurity. You can help make sure no student goes hungry by supporting the Madison School Pantry with donations of non-perishable food. Madison stakeholders may drop off food donations to any of the building offices. A list of items needed is included below.

If you know of a student who is food insecure please contact one of the school counselors.

"I am so proud of this group," HOSA Advisor and Madison High School Biomedical Sciences teacher, Katie McGormley said. "They were extremely committed. None of the prep work is done during class time; they prepared for this during lunch, after school, during break and at home. It absolutely shows and it really portrays a message that Madison HOSA is as competitive as other well established chapters in the state. We moved mountains at this competition and I am beyond thrilled."

The HOSA students' success is another example of Madison's Public Schools' commitment to Career and Technical Education for its students. Biomedical & Health Sciences career pathway is available for students to prepare for post-secondary education or career readiness.
